Too graphic for kids

To the editor:

This is in response to the letter from Helen Sloan -- Placards sent out powerful message.

As an adult I was taken aback by the photos and it really made me think. I agree that abortion is not always the answer, but my opinion is not what matters and it was not my point for calling the Standard-Freeholder.

I believe that when my three-year-old son is old enough to understand what abortion is, I will be the one to explain it to him, not some protester on the corner.

I believe that Pro-Choice (every unborn child has a voice and rights) means Pro-Children. They just took every right away from my son who did not have any choice but to see these placards.

If they cared about children, they would make every effort not to allow this type of graphic photography to be viewed by the innocent. I would never allow my child to watch anything like this on television.

I monitor everything he watches as to not subject him to sex and violence.

Maybe these protests should be rated.
